Transforming lives
through quality education for over

120
years

At St. Andrew's School we believe every child should have equal access to an education that equips them to thrive in our 21st century world. St. Andrew's provides a quality education to children from families with limited financial resources through a full scholarship.

In 1894, founder Grace Arents was confident in her belief that a solid education was essential in preparing children to build successful lives as adults. More than 120 years later the school continues to be guided by that founding principle, educating children academically, physically, emotionally and spiritually through a progressive, whole-child approach.

Rooted in today's best practices, our student-centered academic program is designed to develop passionate, lifelong learners. Children learn more deeply when they make their own connections through hands-on experiences and student-led questioning; this is the cornerstone of our approach.

Whole Child approach

With a deep commitment to equity in education, St. Andrew's School provides a whole child approach to education that nurtures intellectual, creative, moral and spiritual growth – preparing students for success in school and in life. The whole child approach is comprised of 6 fundamentals that help them become critical thinkers, gain a love of learning, and live their lives as people of character.

1

From the leadership

Dear St. Andrew's School Community,

We are honored to have the opportunity to reflect and share our successes from the previous year, particularly those that have made us a stronger school. It is clear that our accomplishments are guided by our strategic vision, which is not just ambitious, but aspirational. As a foundation for clearly articulating who we are and what purpose we serve, one strategic initiative helped us capture the essence of our whole child approach by identifying six fundamentals: academic approach, social and emotional learning, visual and performing arts, wellness and nutrition, family engagement, and graduate support.

While academics are often viewed as the fundamental principle upon which schools are based, our whole child approach affirms that the social and emotional curriculum is equally as important as the academic curriculum. To be successful academically and socially, students must learn the social and emotional skills of assertiveness, cooperation, empathy, responsibility, and self-control.

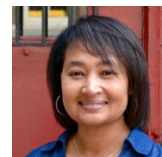

As we look back on the year, it is affirming to see how true we are to our social and emotional curriculum, namely through its integration into the daily life of the school. One powerful example that stood out last May was a mindfulness activity implemented with the entire school, specifically through the beautiful notes of a singing bowl- an inverted bell capable of producing a sustained musical note.

During an Otter Assembly in Baldwin Hall, our school social work counselor led the students in the activity to begin and end our time together. Ninety-six kindergarten through fifth grade students were invited to get into their mindful bodies-feet flat on the floor, hands in their laps, sitting up straight, facing forward. They closed their eyes and focused on their sense of hearing as the singing bowl was tapped. And there was silence-full cooperation and focus for a sustained period of time. Certainly these behaviors are part of our students repertoire, as they still their hearts and minds each morning for our weekly chapel, and make eye contact and respond to classmates during morning greetings in the classroom. These rituals are a part of building strong bonds and a sense of trust and safety within the school community- essential for preparing students for engaging learning.

We view social and emotional skills as foundational in preparing our students for the educational experiences they encounter within the halls and rooms of our historic building, and without your support and investment, our ability to be innovative and forward thinking would not be possible. We fully appreciate how important your contributions are in our strive for educational excellence through our whole child approach.

Our deepest appreciation and thanks,

Cyndy Weldon-Lassiter, Ed.D.
